

SORTING OUT THE RECRUITS IS A MOST DIFFICULT TASK

Scouts Often Pass Up Youngsters, Only

Later to See Them Develop Into Stars on Some Other Team.

BY BILLY EVANS.

Some of the most highly touted baseball players when picked prove to be the surest kind of lemons. Selecting star ball players is one of the biggest gambles in the world. When you believe you have found the one best bet, it often develops that the one who has slipped you the booby prize. When it appears that you have picked nothing out of the ordinary, it often turns out that you are the possessor of a very rare species of the base ball family.

A lot of clubs were touted on the great Walter Johnson. The Washington club had a tip on the youngster long before it was picked. Perhaps the only thing that rendered Catcher Johnsonship unfit for service, is what crossed the Washington club to obtain one of the greatest peaches ever plucked in the base ball orchard. Since Walter has become famous, any number of owners have been frank enough to admit that they had received letters about Johnson's great ability. Perhaps the greatest knock Johnson received was the contents of most of the letters, which stated that Johnson, who had an off day when he struck out less than a dozen, and who was not in his best form when he failed to shut out the opposition, so glowing were most of the reports sent out from the west that in a number of cases the minor league clubs made no consideration that a smile. Owners and managers receive hundreds of such letters every year, to pay attention to all of them would probably bankrupt the club. In most cases the players touted have no more chance of being picked than a snowball in August. This is perhaps the best reason that could be offered for the failure of many of the youngsters who have been touted.

One club had practically given up on the youngster, but before closing the deal decided it would be a wise move to have the scout look him over. The scout, who was a very experienced ball player, says he regards Maraville as one of the greatest infielders in the history of the game. He says that the youngster had been touted by a number of clubs, but that he had never seen him. He decided to go to the club where the youngster was, and after looking over the youngster for three or four days the scout reported favorably, and the deal was called off.

Was Passed Up.

"Shanny" player, but entirely too small and light to stand the wear and tear of the majors. Will be lucky if he hits his weight in the big league." That is the report a scout, regarded as a wise base ball man, rendered on Maraville. When one considers that Maraville weighs very little, it can be readily seen that he didn't regard his batting ability very highly. Maraville's wonderful work with the bat has certainly been a great success. He has certainly been a great success. He has certainly been a great success.

There is no denying the judgment of John J. McGraw, the justly famed manager of the New York Yankees. McGraw doesn't make many slips when it comes to passing final judgment on a player, yet two of the players who are being touted by the scouts are being passed up by McGraw. McGraw has a good chance to look them over carefully. He didn't pass up any of the players who were being touted by the scouts.

Proved Stars for Stallings.

As members of the Boston club, Gowdy, by his great catching, and Rudolph, by his brilliant pitching, greatly aided in the wonderful showing made by that club. Rudolph was known as a "groove ball" pitcher when with New York, as a member of the Boston club he was credited with being one of the greatest pitchers in the game.

yet John Collins has developed into one of the most valuable players in the game. From any angle you consider him. From his highly touted recruits, Collins realized nothing, yet a player who came almost unheralded, and who cost the team's mainstay.

Mack Develops the Youngsters.

You seldom hear of Connie Mack paying a fabulous sum for a ball player. Connie once came through with a fat piece of change for a southpaw pitcher, and about the only thing that pitcher ever did was to show Mack a fat piece of change for a southpaw pitcher, and about the only thing that pitcher ever did was to show Mack a fat piece of change for a southpaw pitcher.

Mike Kahoe, whom I regard as one of the greatest pitchers in the game, has views similar to those of Manager Mack. I was talking with Mike one day, and he said that he had received a letter from a scout who was touting him to some phenom, and it is said of him that he never fails to reply to these letters, no matter how he may regard the information.

"Lots of them," he replied with a smile. "Where?" I asked quickly, for my curiosity was aroused.

"The National and American Leagues," he answered, with an even broader grin. "Every player in the minors with a promise seems to be tied up with some big league club, or at least a number of them. There isn't much likely material, and what there is floating around belongs to the big league clubs. I believe it is one bet every scout is overlooking the small town teams that do not belong to the big league clubs. I believe he would bump into a great many players who would show more promise than the talent I have seen in the minors."

I believe Mike has the right idea about the O. C. scout game that angle.

Capablanca Soon to Give Simultaneous Exhibition at W. C. and W. Club.

PROSPECTS FOR TOURNEY NOW SEEM VERY BRIGHT

Matches to Decide District Championship Likely to Be Played

Jose R. Capablanca, pan-American chess champion and the world's greatest living simultaneous player, will shortly give Washington chess fans a chance to witness and take part in one of his marvelous exhibitions. The young Cuban will appear under the auspices of the Washington Chess and Whist Club, No. 618 Riggs building, and those who may desire to take a board against him will confer a favor by competing at once with W. R. Lewis at the above address, as it will probably be necessary for the club to engage extra floor space, tables and boards to accommodate all who wish to play or witness the exhibition.

Prospects for the proposed District chess championship tournament are very bright. N. T. Whitaker, in a commendable spirit of sportsmanship, having waived his objections, valid though they are, to his method of determining the title and consented to enter the event. While a few minor details remain to be settled, play probably will begin about the first of March and last a month. The rounds will be divided between the three leading clubs of the city, the R. C. Chess Club, the Capital City Chess and Checker Club and the Washington Chess and Whist Club.

Entering the semi-final round with a lead of two full points over his nearest competitor, the R. C. Chess Club, Brooklyn Club tourney, lost to W. M. Russell and R. T. Black, and will now have much to do to win its first honors. Black, who has held the club title for three years, should not have much trouble with the R. C. Chess Club. Following is the final and final game.
